

M onatshefte

für deutschsprachige Literatur und Kultur

VOLUME 108 • NUMBER 1 • 2016

Contents

ARTICLES

- Jens Loescher 1

How to See Through Swammerdam's Microscope

This article deals with the ‘paper work’ of the seventeenth-century microscopist Jan Swammerdam: drawing as part of experimental practice rather than mere documentation. In the “Biblia Naturae”-corpus of the Nachlass, Swammerdam’s raison d’recherche is the position he takes against the theory of spontaneous generation in larval transmutation. Drawing what he sees beneath the microscope Swammerdam adds certain elements to the image of the specimen in ‘layers.’ Nevertheless, this is not the old chestnut of a preponderance of theory overruling ‘realistic’ representation. Rather, microscopical observation must rely on experimental cognition as an intermediary between plain sensual input and ‘how to see.’ It turns out that this kind of experimental cognition depends crucially on the ‘paper work’ of the microscopist rather than on her skill handling the technical device. Surprisingly, this is equally true for later stages of microscopy, as this article demonstrates for the 20th-century neuroanatomists Ramòn y Cajal and James Papez. (JL)

- Lena Heilmann 23

Literature and the Fear of a Suicide Epidemic after Fanny von Ickstatt’s Fatal Fall in 1785

On January 14, 1785, witnesses watched in horror as seventeen-year-old Fanny von Ickstatt tumbled off the Frauenkirche in Munich and fell to her gruesome death. Ickstatt’s sudden and highly visible suicide perplexed the public, captivated the attention of newspaper presses, and led to a short-lived media sensation, all of which exacerbated pre-existing fearful attitudes concerning suicide’s increased presence in texts. News of Ickstatt’s death dovetailed with a cultural anxiety about how printed descriptions of suicide might glamorize the act and contribute to a suicide epidemic. Narratives and reports of Ickstatt's suicide offered a new moment in eighteenth-century Germany as authors, philosophers, and historians now re-considered the purported "suicide epidemic" along gendered lines. This article traces competing discourses pertaining to Ickstatt's suicide in order to offer a broader understanding of the multi-faceted conversations regarding suicide and gender roles in eighteenth-century Germany. (LH)

Henrik Sunde Wilberg

42

Translation as Subversion: Ludwig Tieck's Don Quixote and the Poetic Logic of Jena Romanticism

This article sets out from a hitherto overlooked connection between literature and philosophy in the Jena Romantic period. In Ludwig Tieck's translation of Cervantes' Don Quixote (1799) there is a direct interpolation of a major philosophical concept: the Spanish hazaña—describing the undertakings of the hero, meaning “heroic deed” or “exploit”—is translated as Tathandlung, the neologism Fichte had forged in the first Wissenschaftslehre (1794). This gives rise not to an abstract question of poetry's relation to thought but a complex constellation of responses within the literary politics of Jena Romanticism, from the place of Fichte to the role of translation, as well as the theory of the novel, in which, in the quarrel over Don Quixote, the Romantic “transcendental poesy” becomes subverted. I show that Friedrich Schlegel responds with a strategy in which one of the professed collective and collaborative ideals of Romantic thought—sympphilosophy—comes to exclude Tieck's position, applying the framework of Plato's Ion. The ironic position Schlegel claims can thus, I argue, be constructed as a response, in Platonic terms, to the un- or even anti-philosophical rhapsode—the ionic position—perceived in the poetic practice of Tieck. (HSW)

Ivan Boldyrev

69

Spekulative Poesie: Geheimnis und Geschichte in Hegels *Eleusis

Hegel's poem Eleusis (1796) implies a paradox in trying to combine a critique of language as inadequate for expressing the Absolute with a plea for keeping a secret. Dialectics suggests that the secret is the poem itself in its performance. I show that Eleusis envisions a certain view of history that entails a pessimistic relation to actuality and a utopian longing for the new community of those who keep secrecy. Unearthing the Christian inspiration that drives the development of the main ideas to be found in Eleusis helps to demonstrate that it is on this community enacted by the poem that the secret of the Eleusinian mysteries and, generally, the destiny of the Absolute, would further depend. In an intersubjective and thus truly dialectical way the poem should open itself towards interpretations that could ruin its initial message. This fragility remains a distinctive feature of Hegel's speculative poetry and lends it the hope of remaining a ‘secret as secret.’ (IB; in German)

Contents	v
Thomas Rendall	85
Thomas Mann's Dantesque Zauberberg
Of the many parallels to Dante in Zauberberg the most intriguing occur in its presentation of the hero's love for Clawdia Chauchat. Castorp's comically elaborate courtship resembles Dante's courtly service to Beatrice, and the eventual broadening of his sentiments also resembles, in a more serious vein, the transformation of Dante's love from eros to caritas . When Dante is finally reunited with Beatrice at the top of the mountain of Purgatory, she is accompanied by a mythological animal representing Christ, and when Clawdia after long absence returns to Hans, she also has a new lover explicitly associated with the Saviour. As Dante ultimately recognizes the spiritual nature of his love, so Hans agrees with Clawdia to be bound by a newly chaste affection in mutual service to Peepkorn. Dante's transformed love leads him to the presence of God, and whatever hope remains at the end of Zauberberg seems also to rest on the possibility of a love which can somehow go beyond the purely material and selfish. (TR)
Robert Craig	99
"Ist die Schwarze Köchin da? Jajaja . . .": Mimesis and Günter Grass's Die Blechtrommel
Die Blechtrommel (1959) has inspired widely divergent readings, not least in respect of the aesthetic grounds that the novel offered for the social hope in the wake of Auschwitz. This article re-visits it against the backdrop of Grass's own recognition of the post-war author's—personal and collective—sense of complicity; and in that connection it considers how Die Blechtrommel embodies the dialectic of hope and despair more broadly characteristic of Grass's sense of post-war literary and political engagement. Its contention is that Theodor W. Adorno's conception of "Mimesis," as it is developed in Dialektik der Aufklärung (1944) and Ästhetische Theorie (1970), can provide a compelling account for Grass's aesthetic and ethical achievement. The article examines the senses in which Oskar embodies the dynamic of Mimesis, staking as he does a subversive ethical claim for his notorious drumming and sing-shattering. It then turns to showing how Grass's portrayal of the "bodily" reveals it as a meeting point of complicity, shame, and guilt—but also a faintly utopian site for a new social order. By thinking through these insights precisely with Mimesis in mind, we might begin to do justice to the elusive moment of hope in Grass's work. (RC)
BOOK REVIEWS	120
Barnett, David, Brecht in Practice: Theatre, Theory and Performance (Ralf Remshardt) . . . . .	143
Brandes, Peter, Leben die Bilder bald? Ästhetische Konzepte bildlicher Lebendigkeit in der Literatur des 18. und 19. Jahrhunderts (Rüdiger Singer) . . . . .	125

Brittnacher, Hans Richard und Irmela von der Lühe, Hrsg., Enttäuschung und Engagement. Zur ästhetischen Radikalität Georg Büchners (Jeffrey L. Sammons) . . . . .	132
Busch, Anna, Hitzig und Berlin. Zur Organisation von Literatur (1800–1840) (Roman Lach) . . . . .	129
Eming, Jutta, Ann Marie Rasmussen, and Kathryn Starkey, eds., Visibility and Materiality in the Story of Tristan and Isolde (Salvatore Calomino) . . . . .	122
Erdbrügger, Torsten und Stephan Krause, Hrsg., Leibesvisitationen. Der Körper als mediales Politikum in den (post)sozialistischen Kulturen und Literaturen (Sonja E. Klocke) . . . . .	158
Fellner, Friederike, Kafkas Zeichnungen (Stephanie Schmitt) . . . . .	140
Finch, Helen, Sebald's Bachelors: Queer Resistance and the Unconforming Life (Mark McCulloh) . . . . .	149
Finch, Helen and Lynn L. Wolff, eds., Witnessing, Memory, Poetics: H.G. Adler &amp; W.G. Sebald (Mark McCulloh) . . . . .	149
Fliedl, Konstanze, Bernhard Oberreither und Katharina Serles, Hrsg., Gemälderedereien. Zur literarischen Diskursivierung von Bildern (Thyra Knapp) . . . . .	120
Haines, Brigid B. and Lyn L. Marven, eds., Herta Müller (Anca Luca Holden) . . . . .	155
Heffernan, Valerie and Gillian Pye, eds., Transitions: Emerging Women Writers in German-language Literature (Alexandra Hill) . . . . .	167
Horstkotte, Silke und Leonhard Herrmann, Hrsg., Poetiken der Gegenwart. Deutschsprachige Romane nach 2000 (Gillian Pye) . . . . .	164
Huyssen, Andreas, Miniature Metropolis: Literature in an Age of Photography and Film (Justin Court) . . . . .	137
Jost-Fritz, Jan Oliver, Geordnete Spontaneität. Lyrische Subjektivität bei Achim von Arnim (Joseph D. Rockelmann) . . . . .	127
Käser, Rudolf und Beate Schappach, Hrsg., Krank geschrieben. Gesundheit und Krankheit im Diskursfeld von Literatur, Geschlecht und Medizin (Sonja E. Klocke) . . . . .	158
O'Neill, Patrick, Transforming Kafka: Translation Effects (Marjorie E. Rhine) . . . . .	142
Osborne, Dora, Traces of Trauma in W.G. Sebald and Christoph Ransmayr (Mark McCulloh) . . . . .	149
Rohde, Carsten und Hansgeorg Schmidt-Bergmann, Hrsg., Die Unendlichkeit des Erzählens. Der Roman in der deutschsprachigen Gegenwartsliteratur seit 1989 (Christiane Steckenbiller) . . . . .	162
Shen, Qinna und Martin Rosenstock, eds., Beyond Alterity: German Encounters with Modern East Asia (Mary Rhiel) . . . . .	145
Siguan, Marisa, Schreiben an den Grenzen der Sprache. Studien zu Améry, Kertész, Semprún, Schalamow, Herta Müller und Aub (Klaus L. Bergahn) . . . . .	152
von Graevenitz, Gerhart, Theodor Fontane: ängstliche Moderne. Über das Imaginäre (Frederick Betz) . . . . .	135
Wagner-Egelhaaf, Martina, Hrsg., Auto(r)fiktion. Literarische Verfahren der Selbstkonstruktion (Katra Byram) . . . . .	147